There is a typo... Panel 36 was placed on the Friday, and Panels 33, 34 and 35 were placed on the Saturday, as summarized in the graphic that accompanied my recent email.

Regarding the use of re-bar... apologize it was not stated more clearly. We found that the currents easily lift up the un-rocked flap of fabric, making it much more difficult to overlap the next panel. So we started attaching re-bar to the fabric to help provide some rigidity and prevent the incoming tide from lifting the fabric up.

Let me know if this makes any sense to you or if I need to try again.

I will correct the minutes as part of our teleconference tomorrow.

Stan,

On page 2, Section 3, item d – What happened to N34?

On page 2, Section 4, item a – In the second sentence, can you clarify whether you are referring to the panel or the rebar in the parenthetical.

Thanks,

Jen
